THE GLOBAL CITIES INITIATIVE

A joint project of Brookings and JPMorgan Chase

FDI in U.S. Metro Areas: The Geography of Jobs in Foreign-Owned Establishments

New Brookings research supported by the Global Cities Initiative provides a first-of-its kind analysis of where jobs in foreign-owned businesses are located and examines the role that foreign investment can play in helping to rebuild local economies.

The Global Cities Initiative brought business, community and government leaders together in three cities this quarter to discuss strategies for economic growth:

Seattle. A coalition of business and government leaders announced that the Central Puget Sound region is joining a pilot program to attract foreign direct investment as part of the Global Cities Exchange. After the forum, leaders from Seattle joined economic development colleagues from five other cities in a working session, where they discussed developing their foreign direct investment plans.

Phoenix. This GCI forum featured a dialogue on global trade with former Ambassador Carla Hills and former Secretary of Commerce William Daley. U.S. Commerce Secretary Penny Pritzker also joined the forum via satellite to announce the launch of the next phase of the National Export Initiative and recognized “metropolitan leaders who are developing global trade and investment strategies through [GCI and] are at the forefront of this important effort that will strengthen our economy.”

Louisville-Lexington. Leaders from the Louisville-Lexington region came together to discuss the importance of a strong workforce and an innovative manufacturing sector. The forum focused on priorities identified through the Bluegrass Economic Advancement Movement – a joint regional business plan to grow the economy, increase trade and investment, and create quality jobs by building on shared manufacturing assets.
